KEY ASSIGNMENTS:

Each unit will include student writing products organized around genre. These writing assignments will comprise the key assignments:

- 1.) Using narrative structure to write about real events: autobiographical sketch, personal narrative
- 2.) Information/explanatory text: explanatory essay, formal letter with directions, history research report, science research report
- 3.) Argument writing: book review with reasons to read/not read the book, argument essay
- 4.) Using narrative and poetic forms to write about real or imagined events: fictional narrative, narrative poem

SAMPLE LESSON PLAN:

Sample Essential Question for a 6-week unit: What can we gain from reading about past civilizations?

Essential Question for a week within this unit: How did democracy develop?

Introduce the concept via collaborative conversations about a visual (10 minutes):
(Standards: RH 6.7, SL.6.1c)

Students read the essential question on page 104 of their Reading/Writing Workshop workbook.

Teacher: Explains that for thousands of years, people have been aspiring to govern themselves; discusses the photograph of Bouleuterion with the students, explaining that what happened there was a foundation, or basis, for democracy; gives background information on Priene, the Boule, and the Bouleuterion, and asks students, “How were the citizens of Priene laying a foundation for democracy? What was the Boule aspiring to do?”

Students: Discuss the questions in pairs or small groups

Teacher: Models how to use the graphic organizer to generate words and phrases related to the structure of Priene’s government; adds student ideas

Students: complete their graphic organizers, then discuss with their partner why they think Priene’s government was organized that way

Listening Comprehension/Interactive Read Aloud (10 minutes):

(Standards: SL.6.2, RI.6.1)

Before the Read Aloud:

Teacher will connect the reading to the central concept (democracy) by explaining that the US Constitution was not the first document outlining the relationship between free people and their government; the teacher is going to read aloud about two earlier documents on the path to democracy – the Magna Carta and the Mayflower Compact

Preview the genre (expository text) – teacher will explain the features of expository text

Teacher will preview the reading comprehension strategy of asking and answering questions (and will model it during the read aloud)

Read aloud/Think Aloud – Teacher reads page T 71 about the Magna Carta and the Mayflower Compact, stopping in at least 3 places to model/do a Think Aloud of the comprehension strategy of Asking and Answering questions about the passage

After the Read Aloud:

Teacher points out the elements of the passage that show it was an expository text; students think of other texts they've read that were expository

Students summarize the most important information from the reading in their own words

Vocabulary Development (10 minutes):
(Standard: L.6.6)

Teacher will first introduce each of the eight vocabulary words (aspirar, cimientos, especulacion, impulsar, precede, principal, resistir, restringir) by stating the definition, using the word in a sentence, and then having the students answer a question that uses the word. The definitions, example sentences, and questions can be found on the Visual Vocabulary Cards along with an illustration of the word/concept. (And on pages 106-107 in the Reading and Writing Workshop workbook)

Students will then choose three of the eight words, write questions that use them, and exchange their questions with a partner.

Close Reading:
(Standards: RI.6.2, RH.6.1)

The first read of the text (The Democracy Debate on pages 109-110 of the student text) will be a shared read. Students will identify key ideas and details about democracy. They will take notes and summarize, using the textbook's prompts as needed.

Before reading: Teacher will tell students that they are about to read about how the concept of democracy has changed over the centuries.

During reading, teacher will model how to take notes related to the Essential Question.

After paragraphs 1 and 2, teacher asks students, "How do the author's questions help readers set a purpose for reading?" Students discuss in pairs/small groups before sharing with whole class.

After paragraphs 3 and 4, teacher asks students, "What ideas did Socrates have about democracy? How are his ideas different than our ideas about democracy today?" Students discuss in pairs/small groups before sharing with whole class.

After the first read, students will tell their partners how philosophers' ideas influenced our democracy, citing evidence from the reading. Students will use these sentence frames to focus the discussion:

Lei que Aristoteles creia que..... (I read that Aristotle believed....)
Nuestra democracia refleja.... (Our democracy reflects....)

Re-read: Teacher will explain that good readers preview the text by looking at the title, headings, illustrations, and other text features and use those features to develop a key question that sets a purpose for reading. The teacher models this process with the first section of the passage. The students work in pairs to apply the strategy to the rest of the reading, discussing

- How they answered their purpose-setting questions (how they used the strategy)
- What the great thinkers of ancient Greece, Rome, and the United States thought about how democracy should be put into practice

Formative assessment and small group differentiation: Students can work in small groups depending on how well they were able to create and answer purpose-setting questions. The teacher can re-teach page T104 to students who are approaching level; students at level can review page T109, and Advanced students can do page T113.)

(During the rest of the week the students will read two more passages about democracy and apply the Ask and Answer Questions comprehension strategy. Each reading will be done with increasing student independence and less teacher guidance following the Gradual Release of Responsibility model. Students will analyze a sample student response that writes to one source – lessons on grammar and spelling will be embedded. Then students will write their own response writing to one source. Next students will analyze a sample student response that writes to two sources with grammar and spelling lessons embedded. After that, students will write their own response that writes to two sources.)
